By THOMAS KIRBY.

If there was anything in connection with baseball that was not injected into that game yesterday it escaped the observation of the writer. At the end of three hours and a half time was called by the umpires and a balk was all that about remained untouched. Take it from one who among those present, it was some baseball pastiming which converted an ordinary sane and self-respecting band of American citizens into a gang of unnary sane and self-respecting band of American citizens into a gang of unterrified and uncontrollable maniacs. There was not a section of the stands—bleachers, pavillion or grandstand—that was not wild and there was more or less excuse for the individual who was finally pulled out of the stands by a plain clothes man for using language that is not permitted in some of our select sets.
